

Instead of having the actors individually interact with the system, a User class was created to generalize all 3 independent actors with respect to the Factory Method design pattern. This lets the actors interact easily with the different utilities the system provides. It also helps minimize the unnecessary interaction among different classes, thus reducing the amount of code that will be written and with it potential mistakes.